The new Autumn Hats show a tendency towards large shapes.

The question of the moment isn't it. The color, shape and material of your fall hat, uncommonly smart looking with the correct, refining touch, almost all are individual, and range all the way from a small hat one wears with a suit, to the broader brimmed creations seen on dress occasions.

Children's and Misses' Hats in Felt, Velvet, Silk, and Velour, with corded bands and streamers.

NEWBURGH.

The wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Quail, Newburgh, on Thursday, of their daughter, Ruby Jane, to Clarence Frederick Hanna, son of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson Hanna, Rev. George Kerby performing the ceremony. The house was decorated with flowers and autumn leaves. The bridesmaid was Miss Gladys Quail and the groomsman, Dr. George Pixley, sister and cousin of the bride respectively. The maids of honor were Miss Salata and Miss Rockwell, both sister graduates of the bride, from Fenton Hospital. Little Miss Edith Cohn and Paul acted as flower girl, while her mother, Mrs. George Paul, played the wedding march. The wedding gifts were numerous, and the house was crowded with guests, only the immediate relatives of the bride being present. The groom's gift to the bride was a pearl necklace. Among the out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. Merriman, of Poland, N. Y. After the wedding luncheon had been served, the happy young couple left on a motor trip through western Ontario and New York state and upon their return they will reside in Newburgh.

POULTRY DEMONSTRATION

The Educational Poultry Demonstration which is being held in the Armouries, Napanee, on Wednesday, November 1st, and Thursday, November 2nd, 1922, is being arranged under the auspices of the Napanee Poultry Association in co-operation with the Dominion and Ontario Live Stock Branches and the Poultry Departments of the Central Experimental Farm and the O.A.C. The demonstration will consist of exhibits of local breeding stock for sale to buyers, complete classification of dressed poultry of all classes, modern poultry equipment, poultry feeds, crate fattening, incubation, proper and improper methods of mating breeding pens, poultry diseases, and an exhibit from the Lennox and Addington Poultry Breeding Station. In addition, demonstrations will be conducted in killing and plucking, carving, egg candling, caponizing and culling. Motion pictures will be shown each evening featuring certain phases of the poultry industry.

The objects of this Education Demonstration are as follows :

1. To show those interested in poultry the proper method of preparing poultry for the market in order to secure the highest price.

2. To raise the standard of poultry in Lennox and Addington and to encourage the raising stock at prices which the farmers can afford to pay.

3. To give helpful information that will be of real practical value to everyone interested in poultry, by demonstrations and exhibits such as carving, egg candling, poultry diseases, motion pictures, caponizing, culling, etc.

Anyone wishing to offer breeding stock for sale at this demonstration must conform with the following rules :

1. Must be a member of the Napanee Poultry Association. Membership tickets may be obtained from the Secretary, E. W. Metcalfe, Napanee.

2. Each exhibitor is allowed to show one male and two females for exhibition only, but they may offer for sale as many males and females as they wish.

3. The Association charges the sum of 25c, for each bird sold. Where a Bird is entered and not sold, no charge will be made.

4. Exhibitors are not permitted to enter water fowl.

5. Exhibitors are requested to write C. C. Main, Napanee, stating the class, and the breed of poultry, the number of males, and the number of females, which they are bringing. The demonstration in order that suitable accommodation may be arranged.

6. Entries close Wednesday, October 25th.

7. Wire coops will be supplied free of charge to exhibitors.

8. Exhibitors may decorate the coops and advertise their stock in any way they wish.

This demonstration is the best of this sort which has ever been held, and everyone interested in poultry, and the general public as well should show their appreciation of the efforts of the Napanee Poultry Association by their attendance. Everybody will be welcome, and the demonstration is free to all.

GRACE CHURCH

The re-opening services have been concluded and were highly successful. On the sudden death of Byron Stauffer, Dr. Sippell gave an address that was strong and up-to-date.

The supper was sumptuous and well served. The Ladies Aid in incoming $300.00.

The tribute paid to former pastors by the great attendance, and interesting attendance, was remarkable. The services increased in interest until, despite the downpour, some seventy-two cars were parked on the outside. Sunday night last. The nine hundred seats were filled, there were numbers of people turned away for lack of room.

Dr. J. P. Wilson and Rev. C. E. Cragg certainly hold the hearts of the people.

Mr. Angrove and Mr. Booth delighted everyone. The choir, with all who took solos, or solo parts, were great both in the orchestra, with Mrs. Dr. Cameron Wilson, lifted everyone.

The collecting is most complete, but will be at $7000 is now within a few hundred dollars of being reached by the thirty cheerful workers of the collecting committee, under the generalship of Mr. Roy Root.

Now that the congregation is worshipping in a new church they are accepting the favorite quotation of Lloyd George, as sent by him in June, 1922, to a Sunday School for its motto : "Let us March With Our Faces Toward the Dawn." With a fresh dedication and renewed faith in the Name of our God will we set up our banners."

One of the most pleasing features of the jubilee services is the receiving of a fine framed enlargement of a photo of Rev. S. G. Stone, D.D., pastor of the church at the time it was dedicated, together with a bronze tablet with inscription, and a generous cheque for the building fund. These were sent by Dr. John and Hiram E. Stone, K.C., of Parry Sound, and Bidwell Stone, manager of the Royal Bank, Lindsay, sons of Dr. S. G. Stone.

DEHORN COMMERCIAL CATTLE

DOMINION LIVE STOCK AUTHORITIES GIVE UNDISPUTED REASONS WHY PRACTICE SHOULD BE FOLLOWED

A strong argument in favour of dehorning is put forward in Bulletin No. 8 of the Live Stock Branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture. The bulletin, entitled "Dehorn Your Commercial Cattle, Cater to Higher Market Prices," it is confidently expected, say the authorities, that, for strictly economic reasons, growers and feeders of live stock will unite in a nation-wide movement, within the next twelve months, to eliminate horns from commercial cattle. Reference is made to the resolution passed at a recent live stock conference held in Western Canada urging that all such cattle should be dehorned between March 15th and April 15th, or during the month of October. The reason for advocating the periods mentioned is furnished by the fact that it is unwise to perform the operation in either extremely hot or extremely cold weather. Instances are given of actual experiments at the Dominion Experimental Farms and Stations, which prove beyond a doubt the wisdom of dehorning. It is also shown that cattle so treated invariably bring better prices and command a ready sale than animals that have not been dehorned. Horns add to the cost of production and, from the time they are taken to the block are a bill of expense of the producer and the feeder. They are of no economic value to the farmer, the butcher, the exporter, but are frequently the cause of unthriftiness, discontent and injury in the feed lot and stable, result in the placing of inferior meat on the market and cause serious loss in the killing. Proof is given that it not only pays to dehorn cattle, but also, if purchasing, to buy animals that have already been operated upon. The latter are more easily shipped, show less shrinkage and damage in transit and are more economical of space than horned cattle. In addition they are easier to sell and command better prices. A prominent dealer has declared that no single step or operation in the handling of cattle yields larger returns in money than the single act of dehorning.

At a conference of shipping interests in Ottawa it was pointed out that in the event that a store cattle trade is revived with Great Britain, consequent upon the removal of the existing embargo, the absence of horns would be a great commercial asset to the Canadian farmer. Methods of dehorning are given in the bulletin which may be obtained on application to the Publications Branch of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa.

Cape Breton.

Cape Breton carries the atmosphere of a Scottish settlement superimposed on the country of the Micmacs. The red man, it is true, are no longer numerous there, but their place-names are scattered everywhere and remain a stumbling block to visitors both in meaning and pronunciation. A visitor was puzzling over Mooisasalahkt Harbor.

"What does that means?" he asked an Indian.

"Oh, that means big harbor," answered the Indian, with a grin. "Big harbor? Then why don't you say big harbor and have done with it?" was the indignant reply.

The Scottish element of Cape Breton makes it the most thoroughgoing Scottish section of Nova Scotia. Out in the open there is annually held the famous Gaelic communion service. Among this Gaelic population are counted many bards, inspired men, who compose epic ballads as they did centuries ago, and also still in the land of Ossian. And the songs of the Highlands, the "Fhir a Ohata," the "Tamhull mor, mac sheann Tamhuil," still float out upon the air, while the traditions of old Highland feuds or of the Jacobite risings of '41 or '45 still linger, eked out by such visible memorials as one may see beside the rude chimney piece—an ancient dirk or a rusty claymore that some long-vanished ancestor had flourished at Culloden or Falkirk.

It was in this stern land, whose grandeur matches its vigor, that the inventor of the telephone made his summer home, and where he has been laid away in a grave hewn from the rocks. There is a considerable summer colony from the Eastern States, and those who take holidays in Cape Breton speak with enthusiasm of their experience.

Much has happened to make it known as the world since the days of the eccentric Duke of Newcastle, who, according to Smollett, cried out to a courier: "Cape Breton an island! Wonderful! Show it to me on the map. So it is! Sure enough. My dear sir, you always bring us good news. I must go and tell the King that Cape Breton is an island!"

This eminent novelist is conspicuous for his virile characters, absorbing plots and thrilling situations. His scenes are laid in all parts of the country, but he is especially happy when dealing with the West, a section which he knows from long residence in early and later days. One of the most prolific of American writers, he is also one of the most successful. Unexcelled in dealing with mystery, romance and adventure, "The Strange Case of Cavendish" is typical of Parish at his best. You will have the pleasure of reading it in serial form in this paper.

It Is Important Not to Miss the First Instalment!

50,000 Miles of Pipe Line.

The flow of oil in the fifty thousand miles of pipe line that serves the oil industry of the United States never stops. Different grades of oil are separated from one another by "headers," which are merely partitions of water some three feet long. The pipe lines frequently follow the railway tracks, and the oil is helped along by secondary pumping stations. At one time or another almost every barrel of oil produced in the United States travels through a pipe line.

COUNTY OF LENNOX AND ADDINGTON

TREASURER'S SALE OF LANDS FOR TAXES

County of Lennox and Addington,
To Wit :

By virtue of a warrant under the hand of the Warden and seal of the County of Lennox and Addington, bearing date the Tenth Day of July, A.D., 1922, and to me directed, commanding me to levy upon the lands mentioned in the following list for arrears of taxes due thereon, and the costs as therein set forth.

I HEREBY GIVE NOTICE that unless the said arrears and costs are sooner paid, I shall proceed to sell the said lands, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the aforesaid taxes and costs, at the Court House, in the Town of Napanee, on WEDNESDAY, the 25th DAY OF OCTOBER, A.D., 1922, beginning at the hour of ten o'clock in the forenoon, and in compliance with the Assessment Act.

Should any of the aforementioned lands remain unsold they will be again offered at an adjourned sale to be held on Wednesday, the 22nd day of November, for any price they will bring. The municipalities directly concerned give notice of their intention to purchase, if taxes are not fully covered, or for any sum they may deem advisable.

The public will please remember that this is a strictly CASH sale. Private cheques will not be accepted unless MARKED by the bank upon which they are drawn and must be at par here.

Non-patented, or any lands in which the Crown has an interest will be sold subject to those provisions.

W. J. SHANNON,
Treasurer of the County of Lennox and Addington.

Dated at Napanee this 10th day of July, 1922.

IN LONELY LABRADOR

KNOWN AS THE "LONE WIDOW OF CIVILIZATION."

Riches May Be Undiscovered In the Rocks of That Cold Country, But So Far Fishing and Furring Have Been the Only Successful Industries Tried by the Citizens.

Labrador has continued through the ages the lone, lorn widow of civilization. The possible values of its half million square miles are still almost unknown. The Canadian Geological Survey has done splendid work on it, though no industrial development has resulted from its discoveries. Due to its work, however, an immense amount of light has been thrown upon this vast peninsula with its waters draining into four seas. Geologically it forms part of the great Canadian Shield—a vast complex of pre-Cambrian rocks, which in its well known parts has furnished immense deposits of valuable minerals, such as the iron and copper of the Lake Superior district, the magnetic iron ores of the Adirondacks, the gold of the Porcupine, the silver and cobalt of Cobalt and the nickel and copper of Sudbury, Ontario. It is reasonable to suppose that treasures of the will introduced in Labrador's rocks. For beyond the mere analogy with the rest of northern Canada, gold was discovered "in situ" a few years ago in the Menly Mountains, a range running northwest and southeast about the center of the east coast. The furore created at that time ended in a small expedition whose efforts are marked now only by a heap of abandoned machinery on the sandy beaches between Sandwich Bay and Hamilton Inlet. The long winter, which prevents communication by water with the northern part of the seacoast for eight or nine months out of twelve, also broke the Syndicate which was mining pyrites for the sulphur one hundred miles south of Cape Chidley. So far nothing has been done to develop the large iron deposits known as magnetite and hematite in the Grand River Valley. Like some sulky virgin, Labrador is still wrapped in the garments of isolation, while her lovers seem for the time to have turned dejectedly away. Probably the best use made for her riches has been the quarrying of some of the precious labradorite which appears in large quantities near Nain and also near the Northwest river.

War and industrial unrest have prevented the settlement of the question of the boundary of Newfoundland Labrador. It is still an undefined strip of land along the Atlantic coast and the Straits of Belle Isle. This fact, as far as the development of the country is concerned, is a serious handicap. However, events in Newfoundland seem to point to the probability of confederation with Canada in the near future, when the point at issue could readily be solved even if the decision of the Privy Council, now vacillating, should never materialize. In 1912 all the rest of the large peninsula formerly known as "Labrador" was added to the Province of Quebec, an area reputed to contain 354,961 square miles. Under the medieval title "the Districts of Labrador," Newfoundland still holds jurisdiction over an unknown quantity of it, as if she were some sea rover granted all she could get out of "foreign parts abroad."

Canada in 1921 sent the steamship Acadia to make a complete survey of Hamilton Inlet, which she claimed directly lumber mills were erected in the Grand river district. As a result the big companies trading for fur in the Bay have refused to pay duties to Newfoundland. If justified in this, it looks as if those which have long been paid under protest would have to be refunded by the colony.

As Labrador has no representation, it being too expensive to collect the votes of the widely scattered inhabitants, it was proposed in 1915 to appoint the Governor of Newfoundland ex-officio as commissioner for it, but nothing resulted and there is still no one to care for her interests. The first protector, the Governor of Boston, refused to look after her, Newfoundland neglected her, and Canada got tired of her and returned her, till now she still drags along unrepresented and uncared for. This is so much the case that close as she is to the United States many of her marvelous fjords are as yet uncharted. Thus the only chart extant of the approach to Nain from the sea was made in 1912 by a German. My own copy was presented to me by the author, captain of the battleship Bremen, later so famous in the great war.

So far it has always been the fishery and furring industry of Labrador in which have consisted its chief sources of wealth. Considerable changes have overtaken both her land and sea industries. Twine for nets, rope, canvas and all ship necessities, pork, flour and foodstuffs, oilskins, boots, woollens and all clothing, have so risen in cost that each season it can be earned now for less than double the old time prices. Freights have mounted also; poverty and adverse exchange have so crippled our customers in the Mediterranean that it has become so big a venture to fit out a schooner for the fisheries that many of the very best of our "voyage-killers" have been driven out of business. New markets must be opened up. Even lately Russia is bidding for a large quantity; while efforts are also being made to sell Labrador fish in the United States. Unfortunately the new revision of the tariff, among other things, discriminates against fish practically to its exclusion. America's new policy is to raise a huge wall of exclusion against her poor little neighbor.

Prophet as Well as Inventor

The remarkable foresight of the late Alexander Graham Bell, inventor of the telephone, is evidenced by a letter written by him as long ago as 1878, in which the tremendous development of the telephone service was predicted with wonderful accuracy. The letter was written to the capitalists of an electric company who were interested in the development of the telephone in England. By them the letter was issued in the form of a prospectus. Dated "March 25th, 1878, Kensington, London," the letter is as follows:

"Gentlemen: It has been suggested that at this, our first meeting, I should lay before you a few ideas concerning the future of the electric telephone, together with any suggestions that occur to me in regard to the best mode of introducing the instrument to the public.

"The great advantage in possessing over every other form of electrical apparatus consists in the fact that it requires no skill to operate the instrument. All other forms require machines produce signals which require to be translated by experts, and such instruments are, therefore, extremely limited in their application, but the telephone actually speaks, and for this reason it can be utilized for nearly every purpose for which speech is employed.

"The chief obstacle to the universal use of electricity as a means of conversation has been that distant points has been the skill required to operate telegraphic instruments. The invention of automatic printing telegraphic instruments, etc., has materially reduced the amount of skill required, but has introduced a new element of difficulty in the shape of increased expense. Simplicity of operation has been obtained by complication of the parts of the machine or else such instruments are much more expensive than those usually employed by skilled electricians. The simple and inexpensive nature of the telephone, on the other hand, renders it possible to connect every man's house, office or manufactory, with a central station, so as to give him the benefit of direct telephonic communication with his neighbors, at a cost not greater than that incurred by gas or water.

"At the present time we have a perfect network of gas pipes and water pipes throughout our large cities. We have main pipes laid under the streets communicating with the side pipes with the various dwellings, enabling the members of the households of gas and water from a common source. In a similar manner it is conceivable that cables of telephone wire could be laid underground or suspended overhead, communicating by branch wires with private dwellings, country houses, shops, manufactories, etc., uniting them through the main cable with a central office, where the wires would be connected as required, establishing direct communication between any two places in the city. Such a plan as this, though impracticable at the present moment, will, I trust, believe, be the outcome of the introduction of the telephone to the public. Not only will the profits of the future wires will unite the head offices of telephone companies in different cities, and a man in one part of the country may communicate with another in a distant place.

"I am aware that such ideas may appear to you Utopian and out of place. Reflect, however, I beg you, that such a scheme will be the ultimate result of the telephone to the public, I will impress upon you all the advisability of keeping this end in view, that all present arrangements of the telephone may eventually be realized in the grand system.

"The plan usually presented in regard to private telegraphs is to lease such lines to private individuals or to companies at a certain rental. This plan should be adopted by you, but instead of erecting a line direct from one to another I would advise you to connect the wires of the two points to the office of the company and there connect them together; by this plan be followed a large number of wires would soon be centered in the telephone office, where they would be easily accessible for testing purposes. In places remote from the office of the company simple testing boxes could be erected for the telephone wires of that neighborhood, and these testing places could at any time be converted into central offices when the lessees of the telephone wires desire inter-communication.

"In regard to other present uses for the telephone, the instrument can be supplied so cheaply as to compete on favorable terms with speaking tubes, bells and annunciators, as a means of communication between different parts of the house. This seems to be the most favorable application of the telephone, not only on account of the large number of telephones that would be wanted, but because it would lead eventually to the plan of inter-communication referred to above. I would, therefore, recommend that special arrangements should be made for the introduction of the telephone into hotels and private buildings in place of the speaking tubes and annunciators at present employed. Telephones sold for this purpose could be stamped or numbered in such a way as to distinguish them from those employed for business purposes, and an agreement could be signed by the purchasers that the telephones should become forfeited to the company and used for other purposes than those specified in the agreement."

A SCOTTISH CHIEF

He Visited Canada and Entertained the Bay Empire.

Welshmen and Irishmen may be doing very nicely in Canada, but in law there is another race which rules the English, Irish, Welsh, Australians and all the other subjects of the British Empire, and that race is the Scottish. The law courts are mostly of Scots descent and their descent upon the southern courts have gathered in just what they wanted. Among them there is no more typical than Baron Dunfermline, who addressed the Canadian Bar Association this summer.

The shaw of Dunfermline did not pick up this fancy name late in life or just because it was pretty. Nor was he making a mistake such as Lord Aberdeen (or Lady Aberdeen) made when he (or she) decided to add Tara to the list of Aberdonian titles —and then decided that Ireland would not stand for it. No, not Thomas Shaw, for he was born in Dunfermline and Dunfermline, in its Scottish way, was proud to own him and to let him take the great name when the King made him a life peer.

Baron Shaw was made a Privy Councillor in 1905, which explains many of his present honors and duties, and a Lord of Appeal in 1909, which explains his official visit to his native heath. Part of this confidence He is one of the lords of the committee of Privy Council on Scottish University and a member of the Scottish universities committee of the Privy Council. He was chairman of the Scottish committee to enquire and report on state purchase of the liquor trade in 1917 and so may be interested in prohibition as it may seem or be sought for on this continent.

Born in Scotland, he was educated there and practiced there. Even Scotsmen must conquer Scotland at some extent before they set out to conquer England. From Dunfermline high school he went to Edinburgh university and obtained his master's degree. He was a fellow in mental philosophy and a prizeman in history. He has been given a doctorate in laws by Edinburgh, Aberdeen and St. Andrews, but that is getting ahead of the story.

From research and study he turned to the practice of law as an advocate in 1875, at the age of 25, and was Solicitor-General for Scotland as early as 1894 and Lord Advocate as recently as 1909. He entered politics as Liberal M.P. for Tawick in 1894 and entered the Privy Council eleven years later.

So it will be seen that not even Lord Haldane and Lord Finlay, also law lords and earlier representatives from Scotland to the Bar Associations at annual conventions on this side of the water, have had more distinguished education at college, in the courts, in Parliament and on the bench.

Canadian Dollar at Par.

The Canadian dollar is at par. The permanence of this economic value is evident. By it Canada is aiding to the small list of nations in which paper currencies serve only as substitutes for metallic money, a list until lately confined to the United States and a very few lesser countries.

The steady rise of the Canadian dollar is left unexplained by official trade figures. Exports from the United States to Canada during the year 1922 amounted to only $308,000,000, it is true, as compared with $789,000,000 in 1921; but this is offset by the steady decline of imports from Canada from $529,000,000 to $308,000,000. Among the other possible sources of Canadian cash receipts must be considered American investment in Canadian properties.

The equalizing of Canadian exchange will doubtless affect this country in two ways; it will stimulate trade with our northern neighbor, and it will add materially to our exports of gold. The rise of the Swiss franc to par a few months ago caused the mountain republic to become a recipient of no little gold. Whether or not we may expect a similar event in Canada depends on whether the movement in progress for many months past goes on.—Baltimore American.

Canadian Prosperity.

In the steady advance of Canadian exchange to parity, which it reached last week, is seen a fact which reflected the growth of the Dominion towards settled conditions. As we look about upon the countries of the world, we shall be compelled to admit that Canada has returned more nearly to a state of steady work and steady business operations than any other. She has no strikes of importance to mar the picture. Her people, farmers, men in industrial occupations, miners, all are working as men were accustomed to work before the war. Her losses in manhood have not yet been entirely repaired, but progress towards recovery in this respect has been made, while recovery in business has gone on steadily, if slowly, and she is exporting and importing nearly even balance. Hence is the cause of the return of her exchange to parity with our currency. Good crops will reward the efforts of her farmers this year. Under the rapid resumption of work in her gold mining districts, and the discovery of new gold bearing areas will bring her wealth of which she never dreamed. She is one of our best customers and we are her best. Her growth to prosperity, therefore, should bring much pleasure to us.—Rochester Post-Express.

Doukhobor Prosperity.

So prosperous have become the Doukhobors settled around Nelson, B.C., that they have paid up in cash $700,000 of $1,000,000 capital of the company they formed on June 1st last to carry on their buying and selling, returns furnished by the Provincial Government show. The Doukhobor co-operation is registered as the Christian Community of Universal Brotherhood, Ltd., capitalized at $1,000,000.

KLONDIKE GOLD RUSH

SENSATIONAL EVENTS OCCURRED 25 YEARS AGO.

People Rushed to the Arctic Regions In Search of Wealth — Story of Suffering and Disappointment Was Filled With Heroism and Romance.

Twenty-five years ago, July 17, occurred one of the most dramatic events in the history of the West—an event which profoundly influenced the history of the entire Pacific Coast from the Arctic Ocean southward. It was the arrival at Seattle of the steamer Portland bringing sixty-seven miners, each of whom carried ashore a "poke" of gold from the Klondike, a tributary of the Yukon. That gold was material proof that rumors of the great strike made by Bill Cormack in the preceding summer were true, and it started a stampede surpassing that of the California argonauts half a century earlier. Immediate effects were almost magical, not only in Seattle, but all along the Pacific Coast, and they were felt in the east and even in foreign countries. The low-cost campaign of 1896 had turned the minds of the people to gold along with silver. Hosts of people were ready to grasp at any chance of bettering their shrunken fortunes. A vague belief prevailed that Alaska was a land of great, untouched wealth, and it had been supported by the sight of steadily increasing quantities of gold brought back from Forty-mile, near the Yukon, and by the rich lode developments around Juneau.

In a day hard times were forgotten, all minds were on Alaska, which was the subject of every discussion of the Klondike, and thousands set out, though the short northern summer was nearing its end when they arrived. Seattle in a few months became a great, bustling city with all the characteristics, good and bad, of a pioneer mining town. The north-bound stream grew in 1898 to a mighty flood, which narrowed to a thin but unbroken stream when it climbed the precipitous Chilkoot pass to the lakes which form the head waters of the Yukon. Every Pacific Coast port outfitted Klondikers and ran steamers to Skaguay. Portland taking a hand with the old steamer Elder. The flood of husky manhood was made up of streams trickling from every state. From Dawson the gold-seekers scattered down the Yukon and up every tributary. They landed farther west and penetrated the mighty Mount McKinley range. Many took the sea route to St. Michel's and river steamers up the Yukon, and some of these strayed up the beach of Bering Sea to the Seward Peninsula. They found gold on the Nanook, in Canada, the Koyukuk, Cook Inlet and in profusion in the beach sand at Nome, which supplied characters and plot for the Rex Beach novel. Others, who never found much more — copper on the river of that name, coal in great veins in the same region, many seepages of oil, hundreds of valleys where anything would grow and where 24-hour days compensated for the short summers, and lush, grassy meadows where many thousand cattle might ratten.

The most remarkable history of the Western States was to be repeated in Alaska—that the placer miner was to be followed by the lode miner, he by the prospector for coal, oil and other minerals, they by the homesteader, farmer and cattleman, for whom the miner has ever blazed the trail. Such is the optimism that makes progress that was made in twenty-five years in California in 1849, in Colorado from 1859, in Montana, Idaho and Nevada from the sixties, in Oregon from the early sixties, and we can realize that the hopes of the Alaskans were justified by experience in other Western States. Only a little while soon fell on the progress of the great North Land. The land laws were so ill adapted to conditions that endless contests resulted and caused the Ballinger scandal at Nome. The Government was far away, knew little of the country and, what is more, cared less, yet must settle contests.

When demands for new land laws and for government in the North, instead of in Washington, finally won the attention of Congress, the cry for conservation also went up, and progress halted during a long struggle between those who would develop and those who would conserve to the point of stifling enterprise. When the miner was no longer permitted to dig out what he had dug, the farmer forbidden to reap what he had sown, disheartened pioneers flocked back to the provinces of the days before the Klondike was discovered. Remorseful, but still obstinate and ignorant, the Government built a railroad from Seward to Nome, and the country around the Colorado from coal for locomotives which hauled trains without traffic on a railroad through a country which will be rich when it is forbade man to touch. Alaska still waits for the dead hand of Pinchotism to be lifted.

Talky Toronto.

Toronto claims to have a higher percentage of telephones than any other city in the British Empire, one to every five of its inhabitants.

A mule cannot pull while he is kicking, and he cannot kick while he is pulling. Neither can you.

PIONEER MOTHERS.

The Women Who First Lived In Old Ontario.

Pioneer mothers of Ontario will never receive their full due, though now and again some chronicler lifts the veil on their heroic lives. They lived in sterner days, they were unused to luxury or lavish entertainment and they had little relief from the hardest of work. Carving new homes from the wilderness was a serious task for the men folk, as everyone now knows, but it was no less serious for the other sex, the sex which has to feel-spend have as many of the comforts of life as possible.

One of these pioneer women, as a type of her time, is described in the Simcoe Reformer by George J. Ryerse in a paper on "Early Days at Port Ryerse." "Possibly no housewife of early days did more hard work during the years of her active life than my mother," says Mr. Ryerse. "Married at the clock in the afternoon on January 15, 1855, her wedding trip shortly after 6 was taken to the dairyard to milk the cows. Not unlike many young wife with autos or anything else in those days, but plenty of work and still more work. This was her start in married life, and she kept up the pace the most of her active days.

"After first care was to look after my father's children by his first wife, who died some time previous, the oldest being 16. Then nine children were born in the second family, eight of course, made still more work. When father was building the mill in 1849 she would take care of us men at a time, and do it with very little assistance. The every-day work of my mother was much the same as that of many capable housewives of that time, namely, preparing the food, cooking and other necessaries of the family, and looking well after their household. My father was a good provider for the table at least. Every fall a half dozen or more fat hogs would be cut up and packed in brine and in the spring the hams and shoulders would be smoked, and only a limited amount of the salt pork disposed of. Then every spring the product of 400 maple trees in sugar and syrup would be put away for the coming year.

"It was my mother's custom during the fall and winter months to rise at 2.30 or 3 o'clock in the morning and split yarn until time to get breakfast. A few minutes' sleep was taken about 9 and then the regular work for the day, and bed at 8 to 8.30. This routine was followed for years. It was thus our mothers spent their time, and I think mine was only typical of many other good mothers and the grand women of early days in glorious old Norfolk."

RAN INTO RICHES.

Men Who Have Discovered Wealth In Leisure Moments.

Some people make money wherever they go. They are built that way. For instance, there was an Englishman whose doctor told him that if he wanted to avoid a nervous breakdown from overwork, he must get away from England for three months.

Thinking he would like to see Canada, he went as far as Vancouver, Upon his way to that town, Puget Sound, he noticed a great shoal of herrin fish near the surface. They look exactly like sardines," he said, and decided to follow up any discovery of this kind, he got a net, caught some, and had them tinned. Three years later he was exporting yearly 175,000 cases of Puget Sound sardines yearly, and making a fortune rapidly."

It was while on holiday at a French seaside resort that Louis Brennan first hit upon the idea of the gyroscope, which has made his name known all over the world. He noticed a hawker selling tops, and his busy brain caught the germ of the idea which made him the inventor of the first torpedo, and afterwards of the mono-rail. To-day a similar principle is being used by him in his flying machine, which rises straight up from the ground.

A working engraver spending a week at Blackpool took it into his head that holidaymakers might like cardboard cards with their names, initials, or any suitable design.

He hired a stall and tried the experiment. Very soon he gave up his work in Birmingham and took a stall in the Tower at Blackpool. Within a few years he was making a steady £600 annual profit.

Not many years ago the pierrot in England was a broken-down, tenth-rate singer who was paid more money to move on than to sing. To-day pierrots consist of the best type of music-hall artistes, who combine a pleasant stay at the seaside with remunerative work. Of course, they have to pay toll to the municipality, and the magnitude of the charges made upon them gives some indication of their earnings. At Yarmouth a stand is rented at no less than £1,000 a year, while Scarborough, Margate, and Ramsgate all make a lot of money out of stands let to pierrot troupes. The best sites at places like these are sometimes leased for a period of seven years. At others they are put up to auction each season.

A young man of good family and education who had gone "broke" in America found himself back in London, stranded and almost starving. This was in July, just when American visitors begin to flock there. It occurred to him that these people needed guides to show them the sights, and meeting an American whom he knew he borrowed £10 and fitted himself out with a smart suit.

He then offered his services as a guide, and as he knew London well and could also talk well he soon found plenty of employment. Eventually he married a wealthy American girl, so holidays certainly brought him a fortune.

To take a very different case, a member of the London police who was a good amateur carpenter put in all his spare time and holidays during twenty-six years' service in building houses. He was his own architect, bricklayer, and plumber, and by the time he retired he had actually completed seven houses. He was therefore able to live comfortably upon his rents.

Motors In Canada.

Canada's registration of motor vehicles for 1921 shows an increase of more than 50,000 over the previous year, according to official figures issued by the highways branch of the Department of Railways and Canals. Last year there were 467,345 motor vehicles registered in the Dominion, as against 415,268 the previous year. In the seven years previous, there were only 21,519 registrations.

Total revenues from registrations in 1921 were $7,669,493, practically all of which was expended by the different provinces on highways improvements.

On the 1921 census of 8,782,422 persons in the Dominion, there was one motor vehicle for every 19 persons in Canada. In Ontario there were 1,066,517 vehicles and 2,935,153 persons.

The sales of motor vehicles in Canada thus far this year are said to have broken all records, and it is believed that when the returns are completed, it will reveal a ratio nearer one in ten, than the 1921 figures which made one vehicle for every 19 persons in Canada.

TIRED AND RUN DOWN

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Helped Where Other Medicines Failed

Vancouver, B. C.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound because I was tired and run down. I had headaches and no appetite and was troubled for two years with sleeplessness. I tried many medicines but nothing did me any real good. While I was living in Washington I was recommended by a friend to take the Vegetable Compound. I am stronger and feel fine since then and am able to do my housework. I am willing for you to use these facts as testimonial."—Mrs. J. C. Gazaves, 771 Hornby St., Vancouver, British Columbia.

Many women keep about their work when it is a great effort because the work must be done. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has brought relief to thousands of tired housewives by removing the troubles which cause annoying symptoms.

If you are suffering from nervousness, headache and backache, pains in right or left side, tired and rundown feelings, take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Just bear in mind this medicine has been used by women for nearly fifty years. That is a long record of service, and stands upon the foundation of merit.

Football and Basketball.

The collegiate football and basketball teams went to Deseronto on Friday afternoon last and played against Deseronto. The football team, thanks to their practice, made a fine showing. The ball was kicked off at 4.25 by the Mayor of Deseronto. After the first five minutes no question arose as to what the outcome of the game should be. The ball was seldom in Napanee territory and "Phoebe" Scott and "Snail" Perry, Napanee's full backs, played well up towards the half line. The first goal was scored by Kilborn, and Stewart and Cowle made a fine play, and our team scored again, the first half ending in a score of 2-0 in favor of N.C.I. In the second half, Walters replaced Hudgins at inside right, Cook trading positions with Judson, and Perry went to the forward line. Perry scored three times for N.C.I. and Stewart once. The game ended in a score of 6-0 in N.C.I.'s favor. Although the odds were against Deseronto, everyone enjoyed the manly playing of both sides. The basket ball game between N.C.I. and D.H.S. also resulted in N.C.I.'s favor, the score being 30-6.

THE LATE FRANKLIN E. VANLUVEN.

After a long and painful illness borne with remarkable patience, the subject of this sketch passed away at his home on John street, on September 25th. He was born in Yarker in 1861 and came to Napanee thirty-five years ago. With but little capital and experience he engaged in business and from the beginning of his career made steady progress by strict adherence to the golden rule. He was most widely known in the rural districts as the local representative of the Canadian Packing Company and in that town as a coal dealer. He understood thoroughly both branches and at the time of his death was regarded as one of Napanee's most reliable business men. He was daily brought in contact with all classes of people throughout the county and his dealings with them were always marked with such a spirit of fairness and integrity that from all quarters are heard expressions of sorrow at his death and of admiration for his sterling qualities. The funeral took place on St. Mary Magdalene church on the 27th inst., the service being conducted by the Vicar, the Rev. Mr. Coleman, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Kidd, of St. George's Cathedral, Kingston. The esteem in which he was held as a citizen of the town was manifested by the large number who availed themselves of that opportunity to pay respects to his memory. At the conclusion of the beautiful service of the Anglican church, of which he was a member, his masonic brethren followed his remains to Riverside cemetery, where he was interred with all the honors due to a respected member of the order. In Mr. VanLuven Napanee has lost a worthy and public spirited citizen, who was always ready to do his part in advancing the interest of the town, but the loss will naturally fall most heavily upon those associated with him by the nearest ties of kinship, a wife and two daughters, who for seven eight months bravely warded off death with unremitting care and devotion.

Where to Hunt in Canada.

There are many districts contiguous to the Canadian National Railways where the hunter can get his limit of big game. In the Province of Ontario and Quebec they are numerous and within a few hours travel of your home. The excitement of the chase is wonderfully fascinating, and in addition, a week or two in the woods furnishes the finest kind of a vacation. Abundance of moose, deer, bear, and game birds are to be obtained with a minumum of effort and expense. Apply to the nearest Canadian National-Grand Trunk Agent for hunting literature, or write C. K. Howard, General Tourist Agent, Toronto.

Hit By a Car.

On Saturday evening about ten o'clock Mr. J. P. Nolan, who lives on Dundas street, was crossing from Dr. Stratton's office to his home, when he was struck by a car driven by Mr. Chas. Weese, of Deseronto. Mr. Nolan was dragged some distance, and besides being badly shaken up, sustained a broken rib, some gashes on his head and leg, and his hip injured. He was carried to his home, and is getting along reasonably well. It was raining at the time and dark in the centre of the block, and both the driver of the car and Mr. Nolan misjudged the distance they were apart just before the accident, and both thought they would miss one another. Mr. Nolan is an aged man, which makes his injuries more serious than they would be to a younger person.

Sanctuary Method a Success.

Ottawa, Ont.—The astonishing manner in which wild animals respond to sanctuary protection is shown by the increase in wild life of all kinds in the Kootenay National Park. Kootenay Park is the new area in British Columbia recently reserved along the route of the new transmontane motor highway from the Vermilion Summit to the Windermere Valley. The district is practically virgin country and was naturally a home for big game which since the creation of the Park and the establishment of rigid protection has increased to such numbers that it promises to form one of the greatest attractions to motorists when the road is opened next spring. Wild sheep, goats, black and brown bear, deer, moose and caribou can all be seen by the passing tourist along the road or on the adjacent slopes.

Bottle of Tea and Sandwich to Carry Him to North Pole.

Amundsen to hop off on seventeen hundred mile aeroplane flight, relying only on the invigorating and sustaining qualities of tea and a sandwich.

Word was received from E. J. Ward, Government School Teacher, at Wainwright, Alaska, who is in Seattle, Washington, that Captain Roald Amundsen and his pilot, Lieutenant Omdahl, will hop off from Wainwright the latter part of May, or the first of June, to fly across the North Pole to Spitzbergen.

Amundsen plans, Ward said, to make the flight of approximately seventeen hundred miles across the polar solitudes in one jump, carrying for subsistence only a thermos bottle filled with hot tea, and a sandwich. Captain Amundsen feels that the stimulation and invigoration given by pure, fresh tea will sustain him and his pilot while making his unprecedent Artic flight.

Ward said Amundsen and Omdahl were building their winter quarters at Wainwright before he left. They consist of a cabin on the beach near the school house. They were well supplied with food and fuel.

The schooner "Maude," Amundsen's exploration ship, according to Ward is drifting northward on the ice floe at such a speed that the explorer is expecting that the ship may cross the Pole and reach Spitzbergen in a year, although it may take longer. The "Maude" has a supply of provisions to last seven years.

HON. J. A. STEWART DEAD.

Was Minister of Railways In the Meighen Cabinet.

MONTREAL, Oct. 9.—Hon. James Alexander Stewart, K.C., of Perth, Ont., Minister of Canals and Railways in the reconstructed Meighen administration of 1921, died in the Ross Memorial Pavilion of the Royal Victoria Hospital here Saturday afternoon after a lingering illness. He was taken ill on June 16 last and on July 19 came to Montreal, Death was due to anaemia. He was 55 years of age.

The late Mr. Stewart was a native of Perth, Ont., and was educated there and at Ottawa College and Osgoode Hall, where he took his LL.B. degree. He was a King's Counsel and head of the legal firm of Stewart, Hope and O'Donnell, Perth.

Mr. Stewart was connected with a number of successful business ventures, being president of Henry K. Wampole & Co., Ltd., the Andrew ... Ltd., and he was also a director of Frost & Wood, Ltd., ... complement Manufacturers. He was prominent in the Canadian Order of Foresters, having been High Chief Ranger of that order from 1904 to 1917.

Mr. Stewart was elected to the House of Commons in May, 1918, when he was returned by acclamation in a by-election, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Hon. Mr. Hanna. When Rt. Hon. Arthur Meighen re-organized his Ministry in September, 1921, he selected Mr. Stewart for the portfolio of Minister of Railways and Canals. In the general elections of December, 1921, Mr. Stewart retained his seat in Lanark.

Mr. Stewart married in November, 1907, Jessie Mabel, daughter of J. T. Henderson, of Perth, Ont.

Mrs. Stewart, was at the bedside when the end came. Other surviving relatives are Mrs. George W. Rogers, Perth, a sister; and Dr. Cameron K. Stewart, London, England, a brother.

The body was taken to Perth for burial.

SEEK TO PLACE BLAME

Government Will Investigate the Cause of Northern Fire.

Weather Has Cleared Up Bringing Relief to Homeless Families That Were Crowded Into Temporary Homes—List of Known Dead in Zone of Destruction Is Now Completed.

COBALT, Ont., Oct. 9.—The Ontario Government to-day ordered an investigation into the cause of the fire which swept the Northern Ontario territory between Cobalt and Dane, on both sides of the T. & N. O. Railway. The inquiry is prompted largely by charges levelled against the fire-ranging branch of the Lands and Forests Department because of the withdrawal of 800 fire-rangers on September 15. Officials of the Department claim that these fire-rangers were not located in the areas laid waste by the fire.

Members of the Provincial Police report that they had handled 48 bodies, and that practically all had been identified.

The relief train in charge of A. J. Young, of North Bay, arrived here Saturday afternoon, carrying 2,500 loaves of bread, hundreds of cooking stoves, mattresses, blankets, rubber sheets, clothing, etc., for distribution among the refugees. The train went along the line handing out stoves, tents, mattresses, blankets. There was a big trainload, but not enough to supply all the ... although it greatly relieved the situation.

The train went up to Englehart, and returning to Earlton Junction started out on the Elk Lake line. They proceeded to Kenabeek, where a large trestle had been burned out. This will mean that the final fourteen miles of the Elk Lake district will be cut off for ten days yet, until a new trestle can be constructed.

Seven more carloads of supplies reached here from Toronto Sunday morning and will be held until the commission headed by A. J. Young, of North Bay returns from the north. These cars will be taken over the devastated area. The commission expects to have a continuous flow of supply cars coming to maintain the homeless population until they get an opportunity to rebuild.

Orders for lumber have been placed with mills around Cochrane, and it is expected the mills will begin receiving it in a day or two.

The officials of the Red Cross here wired to Toronto for more nurses to assist in distributing the supplies and give aid to persons suffering from injuries and exposure.

The weather cleared Sunday over the devastated regions of North Ontario, after days of rain and cloudy weather. It came as a welcome relief to the families around and crowded into homes and public buildings, and more so to those in tents.

Around Heaslip and Charlton, almost every home contains several families. All Saturday conditions here were most disagreeable. It rained all day and in the different public buildings the throng of refugees stood around gloomily talking over the disaster. Some bright spirits, however, took a more light-hearted view of the situation. C. P. R. announced that telegraph communication had been restored right through to Cochrane and conditions, as far as railway services are concerned are back to normal.

The big question on all sides, is when will the lumber arrive. There is a feverish desire to get started building shacks and homes as soon as possible.

With few exceptions, the bodies of the victims of last week's disastrous fire have been identified. The following are the known dead:

Haileybury.

Gervais Sutherland, about 30 years of age, whose skeleton was found in Haileybury on Saturday. He had been listed among the missing and the remains were identified by brass buttons of his uniform as a member of the town's fire brigade, which were found nearby.

H. H. Elfrid Jarvis Othens, Felix Desjardins, Alfred Rochon, Mrs. St. George, W. W. Wigglesworth, Miss Clarice Dunn, Mrs. P. Cobbold, Mrs. S. A. Boone.

Hillier Township.

Walter Stevens, wife and son; a boy named Laframbois, two sons of Uric Fevron, aged 16 and 14 years; Mrs. Dellon, who died Saturday in New Liskeard Hospital.

Hensilp.

Robt. Bond, wife and eight children, John McMahall, Amos Heaslip, wife and two sons; Mr. Fleming and son.

Charlton.

Mrs. O'Hara, Jimmie Ryan, son of Graham Ryan, Kathleen Nelson, Norman Clarke, Miss Annie Watt.

Missing include the following: Leonard Killoran, a boy who lived in Haileybury; Archie Medigan and son, of Charlton; George Campbell and other children in Kenabeec; Mr. and Mrs. Charlton, of Dack Township; A. Beguin, of Haileybury; James Luthier, of Haileybury.

Victims of Bengal Floods.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—A Reuter despatch from Calcutta says 1,500 square miles and 1,500,000 people are affected by the floods in North Bengal. The loss of life appears to be relatively small, but many cattle have perished and crops have been destroyed, as well as many villages.

Thousands of half-starved persons have taken refuge on railway embankments and other high ground and are being maintained by relief funds and Government grants.

The floods have begun to subside, and an immense area is still inundated. An outbreak of disease, especially of cholera, is feared as the waters abate, owing to putrefaction of carcasses of cattle.

Canadian bank manager defends system of branch banks at New York convention.

Averaged 112 Miles an Hour.

DETROIT, Oct. 9.—Lieut. A. W. Gorton, John R. Mecker, were the Curtiss machine flying trophy race here with an average speed for the eight 20-mile laps of 112.65 miles an hour. Eight planes, piloted by aviators in the navy and marine corps, started.

The race was not so much a speed event as a contest demanding good piloting. One of the difficult manoeuvring feats required was that at the end of the fifth, sixth and seventh laps, each pilot should bring his machine down to the water and taxi over a 1,200-foot stretch before making a hairpin turn and again taking the air.

ALLIES PLAN ACTION

War Cloud Still Hanging Over Near East.

Thrace Will Not Be Surrendered to Turks Until Greeks Have Evacuated Territory, and Neutral Zones Must Be Respected—Arrogance of Ismet Hampers Negotiations.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—Mudania again became the chief scene of action in the Near Eastern crisis when on instructions from their respective Governments, the Allied generals resumed negotiations with the Turks.

As a result of the Lord Curzon-Poincare agreement reached at Paris Sunday, that the Greek troops evacuate Eastern Thrace immediately if the Allies guarantee protection to Christian minorities for thirty days after the evacuation of the Greeks, the Allies are now in a position to Advance a counter-proposal to Turkish demands to occupy Thrace at once, while it is hopefully believed that the Turks will agree.

It was pointed out in official quarters that the Allied offer to the Turks for the Greek evacuation of Eastern Thrace is contingent upon the Turks agreeing to respect the integrity of neutral zones. It is also understood that Gen. Sir Charles Harington has power to make an agreement with the Turks in respect to their positions in the Chanak area, which will not force them to evacuate entirely that zone if in his judgment th Turkish forces occupy positions which do not jeopardize the British positions there.

An official British communique was issued after a full Cabinet meeting, resumption of which is to-day, to consider a long-distance from Lord Curzon at Paris:

"M. Poincare and Lord Curzon reached an agreement Sunday afternoon that the Greek army should be invited to evacuate Eastern Thrace, on the understanding that the Allies should occupy the evacuated territory for a period of thirty days from the date of the completion of the evacuation of the Greek forces, in order to guarantee the safety of the non-Turkish population.

"This agreement must now be presented to the Turkish representative at Mudania, on the understanding that effect thereto will only be given if the Turkish representative accepts the remaining conditions laid down by the Allied note of September 23, particularly respecting the neutral zones on both sides of the Bosphorus and the Dardanelles."

If the Turks reach an agreement with the Allies at Mudania, it is expected that the Greek troops will begin the evacuation of Eastern Thrace immediately. No time limit has been set for them to complete it, but it is not expected as a long process. Immediately after this evacuation is completed the Allied military forces will occupy this territory for thirty days, during which they will be in a position to protect the civilian population and supervise the establishment of the Turkish civil government there and the installation of the Turkish gendarmerie.

Before word was received from London, there had been a halt in the armistice negotiations at Mudania. Two of the three members of each of the Allied delegations returned to Constantinople Sunday. Gen. Harington, Col. Vitelli and Col. Chatel remained at Mudania in expectation of their return, one of the delegates informed the Associated Press:

"We have returned to consult with the High Commissioners, because the final Paris instructions have not yet reached Mudania. We shall return to Mudania to-night."

In the course of the conference the Turks refused to specify the number of gendarmes they desired to send to Thrace. The British delegation had instructions to insist on limitation of the number permitted.

In the course of the afternoon session, Gen. Harington demanded of Ismet Pasha that the Turks withdraw their forces from the neutral zone near Ismid. Unless this was done, he declared, he might be obliged to order a demonstration on both flanks of the Turkish forces.

Immediate suspension of the ferry boat on the Bosphorus and the Sea of Marmora has been ordered by the British.

With reference to the non-arrival of instructions, it was stated that the British had received all their instructions from London, but the French and Italians were awaiting completion of certain recovery despatches from their Governments. The principal reason for the conference with the High Commissioners was, it is believed, Ismet's refusal to limit the gendarmerie.

A diplomat in close touch with the Mudania conference expressed the belief that the next twenty-four hours would spell either peace or war.

"If Ismet continues his arrogant attitude and insist on unduly and seeking to upset the negotiations, the conference must cease its efforts for peace," he declared.

Member to Be Prosecuted.

REGINA, Oct. 9.—R. M. Johnson, unseated member for Moose Jaw, by a judgment issued Friday, and his electoral agent, Fred McRitchie, will face summary trial on the charges of which they were found guilty in the petition action to unseat Johnson.

The order calling for the issuance of the summons was signed Friday by Mr. Justice Embury and Mr. Justice Mackenzie. That started the legal machinery in motion. It was stated the summonses will be issued to-day.

Major C. B. Gregory, counsel for R. M. Johnson, announced Saturday that notice of appeal from the judgment delivered in Moose Jaw Friday would be filed within the week. The limit set by the Controverted Elections Act.

Guilty of Manslaughter.

SAULT STE. MARIE, Ont., Oct. 9.—Harry Lyons, charged with manslaughter as the result of the death of George Hope, who was struck by Lyon's car on Patheart street last May, was found guilty, a recommendation for mercy accompanying the verdict. Hope, who was leader of the Sault band, died of a fractured skull within a few minutes of admission to the hospital. Lyons will be sentenced before the end of the assizes.

RUGBY PLAYER KILLED.

Montreal Man Met Death In His First Tackle.

MONTREAL, Oct. 9. — Allan Arless, prominent amateur athlete of Montreal died at 9.15 Sunday evening as a result of injuries to the spine sustained in the M.A.A.A.-Argonaut interprovincial Football Union match here on Saturday.

Arless was the substitute quarter of the Winged Wheel squad, and this season made his first appearance in senior company after three years of successful play at quarter for the Westmount intermediates, Q.R.F.U. champions. He took the field just after the start of the third quarter in the game on Saturday, replacing Frank McGill at the key position.

On the first play, Arless, a sturdy defence player, blocked a heavy Argo buck through left middle. He stopped the plunge, but was knocked backward in so doing, and the lines piled on top of him. When the players were sorted out the man was seen lying helpless on the ground and was assisted to the dressing-room, where medical examination indicated an injured spine. He was immediately rushed to the hospital, where everything possible was done for him, although little hope was held out from the first by the specialists in charge of his case.

Arless was prominent among the athletes of Montreal. His big boyhood has taken keen interest in many branches of sport, but in football he earned his chief fame. He was a member of both the Westmount A.A.A. and the M.A.A.A., where his genial disposition and untiring efforts on behalf of sport placed him in high esteem among his fellow-athletes.

Up to the time of leaving the city members of the Argonaut Club were at the hospital to offer what help they could, and generously suggested a testimonial game or anything that would be acceptable to the local club on behalf of the relatives. Coach Bill Hughes and Manager Badkley of the Winged Wheelers, remained at the hospital to the last, and officials and members of the local club were continually in and out inquiring after the stricken player.

The death is the second football fatality in Montreal, a young high school boy ten years ago having succumbed after an illness of several days with a fractured skull. The fatality is the first in the Interprovincial Union since "Glad" Murphy died just before the war as the result of injuries sustained in a similar manner to Arless.

Forest Fires In Quebec.

MONTREAL, Oct. 9.—Heavy rainfalls throughout the province over the week-end have brought to an end the series of fires which caused heavy damage to forest areas and threatened in several districts to destroy towns. Hon. Honore Mercier, Minister of Lands, received news indicating that fires in practically every section of the province have now been extinguished. Serious damage has been sustained but it will be several days before the full extent of the loss is known.

Music Hall Artist Dead.

LONDON, Oct. 9.—The death of Marie Lloyd, widely known music hall artist, was announced to-day. She was a prime favorite for years in the music halls of London, where her piquancy and dash made a strong appeal, and numbers of her songs achieved wide popularity. In 1907 she made a tour of Canada and visited the Dominion again in 1913. She was born in London in 1870.

Dogs Make Serious Raid.

HAMILTON, Oct. 9.—Ten valuable Shropshire sheep, owned by Peter Westlay, whose farm is located south of the Sanitarium in Barton township, were killed by dogs during the night, so Chief Clark of Wentworth reported.

This is the third time within four months that Mr. Westlay has lost sheep through marauding dogs.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Oct. 9.—Fairly heavy buying of steers and feeders was the only bright feature to a decidedly draggy cattle trade at Union Stock Yards last week. Around 2,200 stockers and feeders were bought for return to the country, as an Ontario farmer have an abundance of feed, the demand is likely to continue good. Stockers and feeders were quite in value last week. Quite a few one hundred lots are still selling high considering the prices prevailing for butcher cattle. Values, however, are now at a level where they are more attractive to farmers, and indications are that during the coming season will be on a fairly busy scale.

Prairie Farmers Protest.

WINNIPEG, Oct. 9.—Reports of increased rates on wheat for shipment from Fort William to Georgian Bay ports have resulted in the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association protesting to Hon. J. A. Robb, Minister of Trade and Commerce, and urging the immediate abrogation of the coasting laws.

A meeting of the officials here Friday was followed by the sending of a wire of protest to Hon. Mr. Robb. It was reported on the grain exchange that shippers were demanding eight cents per bushel on wheat from the head of the lakes to Bay ports, and Hon. J. A. Maharg, president of the association, in his message to Ottawa, points out that this compares with a rate of 2.75 cents per bushel at this time last year.

CHAPTER I

The Reaching of a Decision.

For the second time that night Frederick Cavendish, sitting at a small table in a busy cafe where the night life of the city streamed continually in and out regarded the telegram spread out upon the white napery. It read:

"Bear Creek, Colorado, 4-2-5.
"Frederick Cavendish, College Club, New York City.
"Found big lead; lost it again. Need you badly. Westcott."

For the second time that night, too, a picture rose before him, a picture of great plains, towering mountains, and open spaces that spoke of the freedom and health of outdoor living. He had known that life once before, when he and Jim Westcott had prospected and hit the trail together, and its appeal to him now after three years of shallow sightseeing in the city was deeper than ever.

"Good old Jim," he murmured, "struck pay-dirt at last only to lose it and he needs me. By George, I think I'll go."

And why should he not? Only twenty-nine, he could still afford to spend a few years in search of living. His fortune left him at the death of his father was safely invested, and he had no close friends in the city and no relatives, except a cousin, John Cavendish, for whom he held no love, and little regard.

He had almost determined upon going to Bear Creek to meet Westcott, and was calling for his check when his attention was arrested by a noisy party of four that boisterously took seats at a near-by table. Cavendish recognized the two women as members of the chorus of the prevailing Revue, one of them Celeste La Rue, an aggressive blonde with thin lips and a metallic voice, whose name was synonymous with midnight escapades and flowing wine. His contemptuous smile at the sight of them deepened into a disgusted sneer when he saw that one of the men was John Cavendish, his cousin.

The two men's eyes met, and the younger, a slight, mild-eyed youth with a listless chin, excused himself and presented himself at the doctor's table.

"Won't you join us?" he said nervously.

Frederick Cavendish's trim, bearded jaw tightened and he shook his head. "They are not my people," he said curtly, then retreating, begged, "John, when are you going to cut that sort out?"

"You make me weary!" the boy snapped. "It's easy enough for you to talk when you've got all the money—that gives you an excuse to read me moral homilies every time I ask you for a dollar, but Miss La Rue is as good as any one of your friends any day."

The other controlled himself. "What is it you want?" he demanded directly. "Money? If so, how much?"

"A hundred will do," the younger man said eagerly. "I lost a little on cards lately, and have to borrow. Tonight I met the girl——"

Frederick Cavendish silenced him and tendered him the bills. "Now," he said gravely, "this is the last, unless you cut out such people as Celeste La Rue and others that you train with. I'm tired of paying bills for your insane extravagance and parties. I can curtail your income and what's more, I will unless you change."

For a moment the dissipated youth surveyed his cousin, then an angry flush mounted into his pasty face.

"You—you—" he stuttered, "—you go to hell."

Without another word the elder Cavendish summoned the waiter, paid the bill, and walked toward the door. John started after him, a smile of derision on his face. He had heard Cavendish threaten before.

* * * * *

When Frederick Cavendish reached the street and the fresh night air raced through his lungs he came to a sudden realization and then a resolution. The realization was that since further pleading would get him nothing with John Cavendish, he needed a lesson. The resolution was to give it to him.

He turned the matter over in his mind as he walked along until reflection was ended by the doors of the College club which appeared abruptly and took him in their swinging circle. He went immediately to the writing-room, laid aside his things and sat down. The first thing to do, he decided, was to obtain an attorney and consult him regarding the proper steps. For no other reason than that they had met occasionally in the corridor he thought of Patrick Enright.

Calling a page boy, he asked that Enright be located if possible. Fifteen minutes passed before Enright appeared.

"I take it you are Mr. Cavendish," he said, advancing, "and that you are in immediate need of an attorney's counsel."

Cavendish nodded, shook hands, and motioned him into a chair. "I have been called suddenly out of town, Mr. Enright," he explained, "and for certain reasons which need not be disclosed I deem it necessary to execute a will. I am the only son of the late William Huntington Cavendish; also his sole heir, and in the event of my death without a will, the property would descend to my only known relative, a cousin, John Cavpdish."

The lawyer nodded. Of young Cavendish he evidently knew.

"Because of his dissolute habits I have decided to dispose of a large portion of my estate elsewhere in case of my early death. I have here a rough draft of what I want done." He showed the paper. "All that I require is that it be transposed into legal form."

Enright took the paper and read it carefully. The bulk of the $1,000,000 Cavendish estate was willed to charitable organizations, and a small allowance, a mere pittance, was provided for John Cavendish. After a few inquiries the attorney said: "You do not mind waiting a moment?"

Cavendish shook his head, and rising, the attorney disappeared in the direction of the office. Cavendish heaved a sign of relief; now he was free, absolutely free, to do as he chose. His disappearance would mean nothing to his small circle of casual friends, and when he was settled elsewhere he could notify the only two men who were concerned with his whereabouts—his valet, Valois, and the agent handling the estate. Enright returning found him with pen in hand.

"A trifling task," the attorney smiled easily. "All ready for your signature, too. You sign there, the second line. But wait—we must have witnesses."

Simms, the butler, and the doorman were called in and wrote their names to the document and then withdrew, after which Enright began folding it up carefully.

"I presume you leave this in my care?" he asked shortly.

Cavendish shook his head: "I think not. I prefer holding it myself in case it is needed suddenly. I shall keep my rooms, and my valet Valois will remain there indefinitely."

The attorney watched him disappear. Suddenly he struck the table with one hand.

"By God!" he muttered, "I'll have to see this thing a little further."

Wheeling suddenly, he walked to a telephone booth, called a number and waited impatiently several moments before he said in tense subdued tones: "Is this Carlton's cafe? Give me Jackson, the head-waiter. Jackson, is Mr. Cavendish — John Cavendish—there? Good! Call him to the phone, will you, Jackson! It's important."

* * * * * *

The early light of dawn stealing in faintly through the spider-web of the fire escape ladder, found a parlor floor window on the third floor of the Waldron apartments, and began slowly to brighten the walls of the room within. It was a large apartment, furnished soberly and in excellent taste. Wealth and comfort were everywhere manifest.

Yet, as the light lengthened, the surroundings evidenced disorder. One chair lay overturned, a porcelain vase had fallen from off the table-top to the floor and scattered into fragments. Back of the table a small safe embedded in the wall stood with its door wide open, its inner drawer splintered as with a knife blade and hanging half out, and below it a riffle of papers many of them apparently legal documents.

But the one object across which the golden beams of light fell as though in soft caress was the motionless figure of a man lying upon his back beside the table near the draperied window. A blow from behind had evidently crushed his skull and though the face was seared and burned, though the curtain's partial ashes covered more than a half of it, though the eye-lashes above the sightless eyes were singed and the trim beard burned to black stubs, the face gave mute evidence of being that of Frederick Cavendish.

The door at the end of the bookcase opened noiselessly and a man, smooth faced, his hair brushed low across his forehead, stepped quietly in. As his eyes surveyed the grewsome object by the table, they dilated with horror; then his whole body stiffened and he fled back into the hall, crashing the door behind him.

Ten minutes later he returned, not alone, however. This time his companion was John Cavendish but partially dressed, his features white and haggard.

With nervous hands he pushed open the door. At the sight of the body he trembled a moment, then, mastering himself, strode over and touched the dead face, the other meanwhile edging into the room.

"Dead, sir, really dead?" the late comer asked.

Cavendish nodded: "For several hours," he answered in an unnatural voice. "He must have been struck from behind. Robbery evidently was the object—cold-blooded robbery. You heard nothing during the night?"

"Nothing, sir. I swear I knew nothing until I opened the door and saw the body a few moments ago."

"You'd better stick to your story, Valois," the other said sternly. "The police will be here shortly. I'm going to call them, now."

He was calm, efficient, self-contained now as he got central station upon the wire and began talking.

"Hello, lieutenant? Yes. This is John Cavendish of the Waldron apartments speaking. My cousin, Frederick C... is dead—murdered. Will you send a detective at once? Thank you."

"You'd Better Stick to Your Story, Valois."

Cavendish, has been found dead in his room and his safe rifled. Nothing has been disturbed. Please hurry."

Perhaps half an hour later the police came—two bull-necked plain-clothes men and a flannel-mouthed "cop."

With them came three reporters, one of them a woman. She was a young woman, plainly dressed, though she could not be called beautiful, there was a certain patrician prettiness in her small, oval, womanly face with its gray kind eyes, its aquiline nose, its firm lips and determined jaw, a certain charm in the manner in which her chestnut hair escaped occasionally from under her trim hat. Young, aggressive, keen of mind and tireless, Stella Donovan was one of the few good woman reporters of the city and the only one the Star kept upon its pinched pay-roll. Though her customary assignments were "sob" stories, divorces, society events and the tracking down of succulent bits of general scandal, she nevertheless enjoyed being upon the scene of the murder even though she was not assigned to it. This casual duty was for Willis, the Star's "police" man, who dragged her along with him for momentary company.

A flood of questions came down upon Valois and John Cavendish, while Miss Donovan, silent and watchful, stood back.

Valois repeated his experience, which was corroborated in part by the testimony of John Cavendish's valet whom he had met and talked with in the hall. There was no flaw in the stories to which the inquisitors could attach suspicion. One thing alone seemed to irritate Willis.

"Are you sure," he said to Cavendish, "that the dead man is your cousin? The face and chest are pretty badly burned, you know, and I thought perhaps——"

A laugh from the detectives silenced him, while Cavendish ended any fleeting doubts with a contemptuous gaze.

"You can't fool a man on his own cousin, youngster," he said flatly. "The idea is absurd."

The same day, young John, eager to be away from the scene, moved his belongings to the Fairmount hotel, and, since no will was found in the dead man's papers, the entire estate came to him as the next of kin. A day or two later the body was interred in the family lot beside the father's grave, and the night of the funeral young John Cavendish dined at an out-of-the-way road-house with a blonde with a hard metallic voice. Her name was Miss Celeste La Rue.

And the day following he discharged Francois Valois without apparent cause, in a sudden burst of temper. So seemingly, the curtain fell on the last act of the play.

CHAPTER II.

Mr. Enright Declares Himself.

One month after the Cavendish murder and two days after he had dispatched a casual, courteous note to John Cavendish requesting that he call, Mr. Patrick Enright, of Enright and Dougherty, sat in his private office on the top floor of the Collander building in Cortlandt street waiting for the youth's appearance. Since young Cavendish had consulted him before in minor matters, Mr. Enright had expected that he would call voluntarily soon after the murder, but in this he was disappointed. Realizing that Broadway was very dear to the young man, Enright had made allowances, until, weary of waiting, he decided to get into the game himself and to this end had dispatched the note, to which Cavendish had replied both by telephone and note.

"He ought to be here now," murmured Mr. Enright sweetly, looking at his watch, and soon the expected visitor was ushered in. Arising to his feet the attorney extended a moist, pudgy hand.

"Quite prompt, John," he greeted. "Take the chair there—and pardon me for a moment."

As the youth complied Enright opened the door, glanced into the outer room, and gave orders not to be disturbed for the next half-hour. Then, drawing in his head, he closed the door and turned the key.

"John," he resumed smoothly, "I have been somewhat surprised that you failed to consult me earlier regarding the will of your late cousin Frederick.

"His—his will!" John leaned forward amazed, as he stared into the other's expressionless face. "Did—did he leave one?"

"Oh! that's it," the attorney chuckled. "You didn't know about it, did you? How odd. On the night of his death I drew up his will. Incidentally, I am the only one living aware that such a will was drawn. You see my position?"

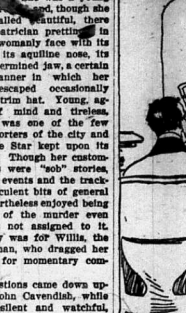
Young Cavendish didn't; this was all strange, confusing.

"The will," resumed Mr. Enright, "was drawn in proper form and duly witnessed."

"There can't be such a will. None was found."

"Possibly not," said Enright with quiet, sinister gravity. "It was probably destroyed and it was to gain possession of the will that Frederick Cavendish was killed."

John leaped to his feet, his face



John Leaped to His Feet.

bloodless: "My God!" he muttered aghast, "do you mean to say——"

"Sit down, John; this is no cause for quarrel. Now listen. I am not accusing you of crime; not intentional crime, at least. If an accident happened, that was your misfortune. I merely mention these things because I am your friend. Such friendship led me first to inform you what had happened over the phone. I realized that Frederick's hasty determination to devise his property elsewhere was the result of a quarrel. I believed it my duty to give you opportunity to patch that quarrel up with the least possible delay.

"I have, it is true, performed an unprofessional act which, if known would expose me to severe criticism. There is, however, no taint of criminal intent upon my conduct and, no doubt my course would be fully vindicated were I now to go directly before the court and testify to the existence of a will."

"But that could not be proved. It has never been found."

"Quite true—or rather, it may have been found and destroyed. It chances, however, that I took the precaution to make a carbon copy."

"Destroyed!"

"Yes, but along with this unsigned copy I also retain the original memoranda furnished me in Frederick Cavendish's own handwriting. I believe, from a legal standpoint, by the aid of these memoranda the court would be very apt to hold such a will proved."

He leaned suddenly forward, facing the shrinking Cavendish and bringing his hand down hard upon the desk.

"Do you perceive now what this will means? Do you realize where such testimony would place you? Under the law, providing he died without a will, you were the sole heir to the property of Frederick Cavendish. It was widely known you were not on friendly terms. The evening of his death you quarreled openly in a public restaurant. Later, in a spirit of friendship, I called you up and said he had made a will practically disinheriting you. Between that time and the next morning he is murdered in his own apartments, his safe rifled, and yet the only paper missing is this will, to the existence of which I can testify. If suspicion is once cast upon you, how can you clear yourself? Can you prove that you were in your own apartments, asleep in your own bed from one o'clock until eight? Answer that."

Cavendish tried, but although his lips moved, they gave utterance to no sound. Enright scarcely gave him opportunity.

"So, the words won't come. I thought not. Now, listen. No living person—not even my partner—has been informed of what has occurred. The witnesses, I am sure, did not know the nature of the paper they signed. Frederick Cavendish had this will executed in a moment of anger and devised his estate to a number of charities. He had no thought of immediate death, but merely desired to teach you a lesson. He proposed to disappear—or at least, that is my theory—in order that he might test you on a slender income. I am able to look upon the whole matter from this standpoint, and base my conduct accordingly. No doubt this will enable us to arrive at a perfectly satisfactory understanding."

"You mean that you will maintain silence as to the will?"

"Absolutely; as a client your interests will always be my first concern. Of course I shall expect to represent you in a legal capacity in settling up the estate, and consequently feel it only just that the compensation for such services shall be mutually agreed upon."

"And your fee?"

"Reasonable, very reasonable, when you consider the service I am doing you, and the fact that my professional reputation might so easily be involved and the sums to be distributed, which amount to more than a million dollars. My silence, my permitting the estate to go to settlement, and my legal services combined, ought to be held as rather valuable—at, let us say, a hundred thousand. Yes, a hundred thousand; I hardly think that is unfair."

Cavendish leaped to his feet, his hand gripping his cane.

"You damned black——"

"Wait!" and Enright arose also. "Not so loud, please; your voice might be heard in the outer office. I said my services would cost you a hundred thousand dollars. Take the proposition or leave it, Mr. John Cavendish."

"But—but," the other stammered, all courage leaving him, "I haven't the money."

"Of course not," the threat on Enright's face changing to a smile. "But the prospects that you will have are unusually good. I am quite willing to speculate on your fortunes. A memorandum for legal services due one year from date—such as I have already drawn up—and bearing your signature, will be quite satisfactory. Glance over the items, please; yes, sit here at the table. Now, if you will sign that there will be no further cause for you to feel any uneasiness—this line, please."

Cavendish grasped the penholder in his fingers, and signed. It was done; in fact a mere dazed, half stupefied, unable to control his actions. In a way it was a confession of guilt, an acknowledgement of his fear of exposure, yet he felt utterly incapable of resistance. Enright unlocked the door, and projected his head outside, comprehending clearly that the proper time to strike was while the iron was hot.

Calling Miss Healy, one of his stenographers, he made her an official witness to the document and the signature of John Cavendish.

Not until ten minutes later when he was on the street did it occur to John Cavendish that the carbon copy of the will, together with the rough notes in his cousin's handwriting, still remained in Enright's possession. Vainly he tried to force himself to return and demand them, but his nerve failed, and he turned away hopelessly in the hurrying crowds.

* * * * *

As Francois Valois trudged along the night streets toward his rooming house he came face to face with a trim young woman in a smart blue serge. "Why, hello!" she greeted pleasantly, bringing up short. Then seeing the puzzled look upon the valet's face, she said: "Don't you remember me? I'm Miss Donovan of the Star. I came up to the apartments the morning of the Cavendish murder with one of the boys."

Valois smiled warmly; men usually did for Miss Donovan. "I remember," he said dolorously.

The girl sensed some underlying sorrow in his voice and with professional skill learned the cause within a minute. Then, because she believed that there might be more to be told, and because she was big-hearted and interested in every one's troubles, she urged him to accompany her to a near-by restaurant and pour out his heart while she supped. Lonely and disheartened, Valois accepted gladly and within half an hour they were seated at a tiny table in an Italian cafe.

"About your discharge?" she queried after a time.

"I was not even asked to accompany Mr. Frederick's body," he burst out, "even though I had been with him a year. So I stayed in the apartment to straighten things, expecting to be retained in John Cavendish's service. I even did the work in his apartments, but when he returned and saw me there he seemed to lose his temper, wanted to know why I was hanging around, and ordered me out of the place. Every penny of me, he did, told me to get out, that he never wanted to see me again. Since then I have tried for three weeks to find work, but it has been useless."

While she gave him a word of sympathy, Miss Donovan was busily thinking. She remembered Willis' remark in the apartments, "Are you sure of the dead man's identity? His face is badly mutilated, you know," and her alert mind sensed a possibility of a newspaper story for the sake of young Cavendish's unwarranted and strange act.

"Mr. Valois," she said kindly, "would you mind if I asked you a question or two more?"

"No," Valois returned.

"All right. First, what sort of a man was your master?"

Valois answered almost with reverence:

"A nice, quiet gentleman. A man that liked outdoors and outdoor sports. Best of all, he liked to spend his evenings at home reading."

"Not much like his cousin John," she ventured with narrowing eyes.

"No, ma'm, God be praised! There's a young fool for you, miss, crazy for the women and his drinking."

"I understand that he was dependent upon Frederick Cavendish."

"He was, miss." Valois said disgustedly, "for every cent."

"Did they ever quarrel?"

"I never heard them. But I do know there was no love lost between them, and I know that young John was always broke."

"Quite a lot, on Broadway," Miss Donovan suggested, "and they keep men up late, too."

Valois laughed lightly. "John only came home to sleep occasionally," he said; "and as for the women—one of them called on him the day after Mr. Frederick was killed. One of those tall blondes with a reddish tinge in her hair. He likes that kind."

Miss Donovan started imperceptibly. This was interesting; a woman in John Cavendish's apartment the day after his cousin's murder! But who was she? There were a million carrot-blondes in Manhattan. Still, the woman must have had some distinguishing mark; her hat, perhaps, or her jewels.

"Did the woman wear any diamonds?" she asked.

"No diamonds," Valois returned; "a ruby, though. A ruby set in a big platinum ring. I saw her hand upon the knob."

Miss Donovon's blood raced fast. She knew that woman. It was Celeste La Rue, from what Miss Donovan knew of Miss La Rue, she did not ordinarily seek men; therefore there must have been a grave reason for her presence in John Cavendish's apartments immediately after she learned of Frederick's death. A thousand speculations entered Miss Donovon's mind.

"How long was she in the apartment?" she demanded sharply.

"Fifteen or twenty minutes, miss—until after the hallman came back."

"Have you told any one else what you have told me?"

"Only Josette. She's my fiancee. Miss La Baum is her last name. She questioned me about losing my job, and her questions brought things into my mind that I might never have thought of otherwise. And at last I came to believe that it wasn't Mr. Frederick who was dead at all."

Miss Donovan's eyes dilated with eagerness and amazement.

"Not Frederick Cavendish! Mr. Valois, tell me—why?"

The other's voice fell to a whisper. "Frederick Cavendish, miss," he said hollowly, "had a scar on his chest—from football, he once told me—and the man we laid out, well, his body was a bit burned, but had no scar on his chest."

Miss Donovan sprang suddenly to her feet.

"Mr. Valois," she said breathlessly, "you come and tell that story to my city editor, and he'll see that you get a job—and a real one. You and I have started something, Mr. Valois."

And tossing money to cover the bill on the table, she took Valois' arm, and with him in tow hurried through the restaurant to the city streets on one of which was the Star office, where Farriss, the city editor, daily damned the doings of the world.

Farriss, for once, was enthusiastic.

"A great lead! By the Lord, it is! Now to prove it, Stella"—Farriss always resorted to first names—"you drop everything else and go to this, learn what you can, spend money if you have to. I'll drag Willis off police, and you work with him. I'll give you a week—when you've got something, come back!"

CHAPTER III.

On the Track of a Crime.

In the city room of the Star, Farriss, the city editor, sat back in his swivel chair smoking a farewell pipe preparatory to going home. His thoughts were suddenly interrupted by a clatter of footsteps, and, stepping his feet to the floor, he turned to confront Willis and Miss Donovan.

Miss Donovan smiled at him. "Great luck! We've got something; and we dug all week to get it."

"Well, for Pete's sake, shoot!" demanded Farriss. "Cavendish, I suppose?"

The two nodded. Their eyes were alight with enthusiasm.

"In the first place," said the girl, with grave emphasis, "Frederick Cavendish did not die intestate as supposed. He left a will."

Farriss blinked. "That's interesting. There was no evidence of that before."

"I got that from the servants of the College club," Willis interposed. "The will was drawn the night before the murder. And the man that drew it was Patrick Enright, of Enright and Dougherty. Cavendish took away a copy of it in his pocket. And, Mr. Farriss, I got something else, too—Enright and young John Cavendish were in communication further. I saw him leaving Enright's office all excited. Following my hunch, I cultivated Miss Healy, Enright's stenographer, and learned that the two had an altercation and that it was evidently over some document."

Stella Donovan began speaking now: "Celeste La Rue, the blonde of the Revue, has got some kind of hold on John Cavendish. It isn't love, either; it's something stronger. He jumps when she holds the hoop."

"La Rue's mixed up in this deeply, too," Willis cut in. "While she was playing with young Cavendish and seeing him almost daily, the lovely Celeste was also in communication with—guess who!"

"Enright?" Farriss ventured.

"Exactly—Enright," he concluded, lighting his half-smoked cigarette.

"Well," the city editor tapped his desk; "you two have pretty well, so far. You've got considerable dope. Now, what do you make of it?"

"It may be a dream," Willis said, smiling, "but here is the way I stack it up. The night before he quarreled with John, Frederick Cavendish called in Enright and made a will, presumably cutting John off with practically nothing.

"Immediately after Frederick's departure, Enright calls Carlton's cafe and talks to John Cavendish, who had been dining there with Celeste La Rue. It is reasonable to suppose that he told him of the will. Less than five hours elapsed before Frederick Cavendish is found dead in his apartments. Again it is reasonable to suppose that he was croaked by John Cavendish, who wanted to destroy the will so that he could claim the estate.

"The dead man is buried, and John starts spending Frederick Cavendish's fortune like water. One month later he receives a letter asking him to call at Enright's office."

LOOK FOR THE BIG SIGNS

MOTHS INJURE GRAINS.

Insect Can Be Destroyed by Excessive Heat.

Most of the damage done by insects to grain in storage and shipment is due to four species, the granary weevil, the rice or black weevil, the lesser grain borer or Australian weevil, and the Angoumois grain moth.

Remedial measures are mentioned only briefly in the bulletin. The insects, it is said, can be destroyed by the use of heat, or by fumigation with poisonous gases. A temperature of 120 degrees to 130 degrees, Fahrenheit, maintained for a short time, will kill all stages of grain-infesting insects, without injury to the germinating qualities of the grain. Carbon disulphid, carbon tetrachlorid and hydrocyanic-acid gas are the fumigants in most common use to-day in treating infested grain. Of these, carbon disulphid is the best for treating grain in the bulk, it is said. Information on this subject is contained in other publications of the Department of Agriculture.

Infestation of grain in the field cannot be entirely prevented, but, by proper precautions, it can be reduced to a minimum. The first generation of insects in the maturing grain is usually small, and if the grain is cut as soon as ripe, threshed as soon as dry, and then placed in clean, deep bins, the damage from this source will be slight.

It is when the grain is left in the field long after it is ripe that serious infestation results, for the insects increase in one or two generations to enormous numbers. In the case of corn in the field, only ears damaged through carelessness in shucking, so that the kernels are exposed, are subject to the attack of grain insects. Farmers should therefore, it is said, grow a variety of corn that develops a long tight shuck.

Newly harvested small grain should not be stored unthrashed for any length of time, as in this condition it is very susceptible to infestation. It promptly threshed and stored in deep bins, only a thin layer on top of the bin is likely to become infested. Corn may be stored in the shuck if the husk is long and tight and fully covers the tip, but all ears with loose, broken, short or damaged husks should be shucked and stored separately.

Clean grain should never be stored in old bins, granaries or storehouses until they have been thoroughly cleaned and freed from the accumulations of waste grain and other materials harboring grain insects.

Bags of all kinds that have previously held grain should not be allowed in granaries or warehouses or be refilled until they have been sterilized or otherwise freed from insects. The use of tight cribs will keep the grain free from infestation by insects that might fly in from the outside.

Our Railroad Problem.

Referring to Canada's railway problem during the course of an address at North Vancouver, Hon. Charles Stewart, Minister of Interior, said that the Government intended to give Government ownership the trial of its life. He said it was the intention of the Minister of Railways to appoint a board to manage the National Railway System that would be representative of all parts of Canada and of the many phases of the industrial life of the country to which the transportation problem was vital. Associated with the Board would be a highly trained technical man as manager of the system.

British Friesian Gains Distinction.

The fifty-second British cow to yield 2,000 gallons of milk is the 44th British Friesian cow to achieve this distinction. She is Bramshott Daisy, a six-year-old cow belonging to Edward Littler of Mollington, Chester. Her yield to date is 2,045 gallons in 235 days and she is still producing over seven gallons daily. She is by Monkton Crank, a son of Monkton Man of Kent, that won first prize at the Royal Show of 1913. Her dam is a daughter of Fairlight Kaiser, a Colton-bred bull of Hawkring strains, and the grandsire of Colton Secret 3rd, the first British 2,500 gallon cow, now in G. Holt-Thomas' Northdean herd. Bramshott Daisy has already had four calves.

The British Friesian cow Brookside Colantha, a member of the Hache herd at Nuntham, Worthing, continues to threaten the 2,000 gallon yield, and with average luck she should beat the British record of 2,614 gallons in 365 days, given by a Shorthorn. Her figures to date are 2,287 gallons in 242 days, and her present daily output exceeds eight gallons.
